Lad's practice focuses primarily on health law, where he provides representation and advice to health professionals and providers on a wide array of legal matters, including all types of College proceedings (i.e. complaints, investigations, discipline, registration), cases before the Health Services/Professions Appeal and Review Board, hospital privileges disputes, privacy matters, as well as the establishment and operation of health facilities in Ontario.

Lad has also written on a variety of health law topics, including the legal governance of hospitals, the Personal Health Information Protection Act, 2004, the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, and the physician audit system. Lad also regularly speaks to professional associations and other groups regarding various health law issues.

In 2006/07, Lad was retained by the Critical Care Secretariat of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to prepare a comprehensive report regarding the status of the law in respect of the delivery of critical care services in Ontario.

Lad also helped establish the Medico-Legal Society of Toronto's "Medical Professional Legal Issues" program at the University of Toronto, Faculty of Medicine - and continues to serve as both a faculty member and editor of the program's legal content.

In addition to his health law practice, Lad also handles a wide variety of litigation matters, including commercial/civil litigation and employment matters.
